Ulrike Herrmann

Ulrike Herrmann is economic correspondent, parliamentary correspondent and head of the communications department for the daily newspaper taz since the year 2000. Her publications often address basic issues of politics, both social and economic. She is a regular guest on national TV and radio talk shows.

No Capitalism is no Solution The Crisis of Today's Economy or What We Can Learn from Smith, Marx and Keynes

What are the reasons for financial crises? Why are rich people rich and poor people poor? How does money work? Where does economic growth come from? These are questions that even a kid could ask under given circumstances – but for some reason they are just as puzzling to our economists who are often tinkering about with theories and models that have very little in common with reality. But their failures do not only cost billions in global currencies – they even cost human lives. A firm grasp on the classics is necessary in order to comprehend what went wrong: Adam Smith, Karl Marx and John Maynard Keynes – important thinkers whose academic representation is either small, faulty or simply non-existent. An astounding fact, considering they gave the best answers to the questions asked above – which is the reason why they need to be rediscovered.

"The dominant school of thought in economics does not reflect reality. Everything that is required in order to understand our current system can already be found in the writings of Smith, Marx and Keynes."

Ulrike Herrmann

"With serene brilliance and logical consequence, her narration roams 250 years..."

Markus Bickel

Markus Bickel graduated from the German School of Journalism in Munich. Over the last two decades he worked as an editor, war reporter and as a correspondent from the Balkan region and the Middle East for well-established German media companies like FAZ. Throughout his frequent travels to the Middle East, he witnessed the fight against the “Islamic State” up close on many fronts.

The Profits of Terror How Germany earns Billions while strengthening Arabic Dictatorships

Siemens cashing in Billion-dollar deals with Cairo; Riyadh and Abu Dhabi showing an increased demand for German weapon systems: the German government cozies up to the authoritarian states of the Middle East, for economic reasons. Markus Bickel reveals how German diplomacy arms the Arabic World with its fixation on trading profits. Lately, Saudi Arabia placed third among those craving for goods Made in Germany, followed closely by Egypt, the United Emirates and Qatar. In any case, it is the local population paying the bloody price for the increasing militarization: Just like the “War on Terror” after 9/11, it is now the war against the Islamic State that provides regimes with an excuse to expand their repressive systems.

Shalom Weiss

Shalom Weiss was born in Hungary in 1929. After his childhood, he suffered the horrible world of Bergen-Belsen and Auschwitz. Surviving the war, he migrated to Israel in 1949. After his duty in the Israeli army he started working at the petroleum refineries of Haifa and Ashdod, where he became a professional engineer and later on, Executive Director.

How to stay human in Auschwitz A Story of Human Survival and Trauma through Three Generations.

This book is an exceptional literary creation and an important historical document, as Shalom Weiss describes his life before, during and after the holocaust using a beautiful and simple diction. Unlike others Weiss takes the liberty – and that's his literary merit – to tell his own, often gruesome tale in a most witty and serene fashion. The book also sheds light on how following generations, and the families of the survivors especially, came to terms with the biggest human catastrophe of the 20th century, as Weiss wrote in close dialogue with his daughter and grandchildren. His narration spans a lifetime and the full specter of human emotions and experience, to create something truly unique.

"This Book enters the core of the soul. We get to know a man who is wise and humane, sharp-eyed and sober-minded. It will forever accompany me from now on."

David Grossmann, Israeli writer and winner of the Peace Prize of the German Book Trade (2010)

Michael Steinbrecher

Michael Steinbrecher is a TV journalist, winner of the Grimme price and host of the talk show “Nachtcafé” on SWR, which is mainly concerned with matters of social politics. In 2009 he became a professor for TV- and cross-media journalism at the TU Dortmund. In 2015, Steinbrecher was awarded with the prestigious “GetAbstract International Book Award” for his publication “Update – why the data revolution affects us all.”

Opinion, Power and Manipulation Journalism put to the test

An increasing number of people distrust the media. What is the essence of their reproach? What is there to say about the quality of journalism nowadays? Are journalists controlled by more powerful people from above? What does the future of journalism look like in times of Facebook and Fake-News?

Together with fourteen young journalists of the Technical University of Dortmund, Michael Steinbrecher and Guenther Rager put the media to the test, questioning their trade critically, while providing means to escape its discredit.

Friedhelm Hengsbach

Friedhelm Hengsbach SJ is a member of the Jesuit Order. Until 2006, he was a long-serving professor in Frankfurt am Main. Writing on philosophical, theological as well as economical issues, he is a sought-after expert on social ethical questions. Today, he lives and works at the Catholic Academy Rhein-Neckar in Ludwigshafen. Recently, Westend published his books “The time belongs to us” and “Share, don’t kill”.

“What has happened to you, Europe?”
Europe needs to find new ways, if it wants to survive!

“What has happened to you, Europe?” That is the question, that Pope Francis asked Jean-Claude Juncker and other high-ranking representatives of different European institutions when he accepted the Charlemagne Prize of 2016 in Rome. The European Union has lost its course. Shocked by the proceeding Brexit-campaign and increasing nationalist tendencies, communication and cohesion among the EU-countries get more difficult by day. Angela Merkel’s slogan “We will manage it” changed into “We will manage deportation more efficiently.” Yet Europe is capable of so much more! Friedhelm Hengsbach demands a radical change of thought and democratic alterations, so that justice, peace and solidarity become the supporting pillars of our politics once again.

Deadly Friendship What We Owe our Animal Friends and Why We Cannot Live Without Them

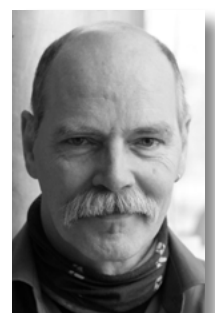

We could not have established global dominance as a species had we not discovered meat. This fact bears consequences for our relationship to animals and nutrition. It ought to be one of care and respect, but turning the world vegan is neither healthy, nor close to nature. To supply the global resources for a vegan diet would require masses of artificial fertilizers. Florian Schwinn offers an ardent plea for animal rights and argues why mankind switching to veganism would be wrong.

Florian Schwinn is a journalist, author and radio host. His career encompasses productions for public television (ZDF) as well as work for the Hessischer Rundfunk as a journalist and host. Schwinn received multiple awards for his works, including the Robert-Geisendörfer-Prize in 2013.

Untold Stories The End of Journalism as We Know it

The media struggles for credibility. Consumers are challenging its authority and opinions are diverging from published ones. The dominant media outlets, not only of Germany, are under attack. “Lies” seem to be the accusation, but are they the problem? Teusch’s analysis covers two different factors: the suppression of information and biased judgement are embedded in the structure of modern media. Without change, the downfall of mainstream media and journalism will continue.

Ulrich Teusch, PhD, is a freelance publicist living near Kassel. He is an author of non-fiction books and is also working for public broadcasting. His last books include: “A Society of Catastrophes: Why We don’t Learn from Our Mistakes” and “Jenny Marx – the Red Baroness”.
