Wild Things: How We Learn to Read and What Can Happen If We Don't

author Sally Rippin

A parenting book from one of Australia's best-selling authors.

A compelling, surprising and incredibly timely exploration of neurodiversity and how children learn – or fail – to read.

When Sally Rippin discovered her child was struggling to read, the best-selling children's author assumed it would sort itself out over time. She couldn't have been more wrong. Her son's dyslexia and ADHD went unsupported for years, leaving him further and further behind his peers, and labelled as 'difficult' by an education system that couldn't easily cater to neurodivergent kids. By the time Sally learned how to advocate for her child, it was – almost – too late.

This extraordinary book for parents is about how we learn to read and what can happen if we don't, through the eyes of a parent who started out by doing everything the wrong way. Through meticulous research, interviews with educational experts and conversations with neurodivergent adults, Rippin shares her brilliant and eye-opening insights into how we can help all kids find the joy in reading, and advocate for them within our schooling system. After all, they say school isn't for everyone, but if everyone must go to school – then why not?

Sally Rippin is a best-selling children's author, with over ten million books sold in sixteen languages.

Sally travels across the world speaking with parents, teachers and librarians about how to engage struggling readers, having brought up one herself.

My best friend's name is Remy.

I think Remy is remarkable.

Remy is Autistic. That means Remy's brain works differently to my brain.

I love that Remy is different to me, because Remy can teach me new ways to experience the world.

A picture book for both Autistic and non-Autistic readers, Remarkable Remy illuminates the experiences, strengths and joys of Autistic people. The story helps explain the Autistic brain – how it works a little differently and how unique it is – and how our neurodivergent friends make the world remarkable!
